Make Money From Your Personal Home Page

Jesse Berst, Editorial Director
ZDNet AnchorDesk

With the holidays just around the corner, e-tailers will try every trick in the book to get you to max out your plastic. So how about a little fair turn-about?

Sure, you may have created your home page for fun. Maybe as a way to share a special interest or hobby. Perhaps it's how you communicate family news with friends and relatives. But why not take it a step further? There are actually a number of ways you can make a few bucks off your home page. You probably won't get rich, but it may help defray some of the costs.

Most recent example is Lycos, which yesterday announced a Builder Bucks program that pays cash to members of its Trind online community

Four Hot Phone Toys You'll Be Talking About

Nigel Nadeau, Associate Editor
ZDNet AnchorDesk

I know it's only Tuesday, but I'm already counting down to the weekend. See, my college girlfriends and I are getting together for our annual garlic party. They're not all on email, so we spend a lot of time on the phone coordinating who's going to bring what.

Of course Jesse is getting annoyed by all the extra phone time I'm logging. Hopefully, he'll believe I'm using the extra talk time to research these cool phone toys.

iPhone: Talk about a one-stop shop. The iPhone rolls a phone, answering machine, modem, Internet browsing device and email station into one. The folks at Equi applaud its quick setup, ease of use and excellent telephony features.

Net Infrastructure Tolls? Dell Drops Below $1K IBM Has Security Chip

Liz Embyek, Managing Editor

STATES MULL INFORMATION HIGHWAY TOLL

Some state governments are crafting plans to charge companies access fees for laying Internet and telecommunications cables along interstate highways. In Utah, fee structures being considered range from $1,000 per mile annually to $250,000 per mile. The debate is creating a rift between local governments looking for fair market value of the land they lease and the telecom execs who say they are willing to compensate for rights-of-way costs -- but see additional fees as a tax. Utah governor Michael Leavitt says he'd use access fees to provide next-generation Internet services, but the Utah Rural Telecom Association says the per-mile charges will make building networks in rural areas "cost prohibitive." Jesse's take: Even
